

Where does the responsibility lie?

Date: Fri, 01 Jul 2011 07:04:28 -0700

Dear Viewer,

Crying and distraught, the children were forcibly removed from their home.

Not an abusive home.

Not even a dysfunctional home.

Instead, the children were snatched from their loving, godly mother and father by German police ...

... because they had decided to homeschool.

Uwe and Hanne Romeike were unhappy with the local public school;

- the ungodly lessons ...
- the bad language
- the changes in their children's personalities.

They prayerfully pulled them out of school — and paid the price.

This week on Cross Examine, you'll meet this brave family, who left their home in a small town in Germany to seek asylum from persecution in the United States.

Their riveting story brings up an important question for all of us. As Hanne said to the German police, as they carried her crying children out of the house and away from her, "Who has the responsibility to raise my children? Do we, as the parents? Or do you?"

Where does the ultimate responsibility rest? What should the state's role be in the lives of our children and grandchildren? Where does that influence start, where does it end?

And what is God's design in all of this?

"Whose Children?" featuring the Romeike family airs on July 3. I encourage you to check your listings, watch, and alert all your friends.

Cross Examine is brought to you through the generosity of our supporters. Please prayerfully consider helping us share a biblical worldview with thousands weekly. As God enables you to give, we'd like to thank you by sending you "Whose Children?" on DVD.

You will not want to miss Del Tackett's easy-to-understand explanation of God's design and plan for the family. Father, mother, and children are all part of God's lovingly crafted "world order" ... and in His Word, He leaves no stone unturned as to how parents should relate to one another — and to the children entrusted by Him into their care.

We live in uncertain days! What happened to the Romeike family could happen to anyone. Arm yourself with the truth. Know your rights. Understand, without confusion, your God-given responsibility when it comes to your home and children.
